

Project 5: Web Layout Portfolio

For my portfolio page, I wanted to go for a minimal design where each of the projects would be represented on a grid by a minimal logo icon. I did this because I wanted it to reflect my personal branding style, which uses a lot of simple shapes and logos while also often leaning into off-black greys with secondary whites and accent muted colors. Structurally, I planned out the page in a multitude of ways, ignoring my visual concepts in my sketches, but ended up becoming somewhat attached to the left-sidebar layout, especially since the page only needed to be designed for an I-pad screen shape for this project. As development of the page went on, the left sidebar had a lot of elements cut from it as they were becoming redundant, and the second pages which had more in-detail descriptions of each of the project assignments displayed in the portfolio were cut to make the design fit better with this project's requirements.
